

Aklat ng Bukas

(The Book of Tomorrow)

1. And Isa spoke, and her voice was carried on the shifting tides.
2. "There is no day without shadow, no night without flame."
3. For within every heart lies the dance of light and darkness,
4. And the balance forever turns like the restless seas.
5. The world was never meant to be ruled by men nor angels,
6. But by the breath of choice, free and unbound.
7. Beware the false light, for it blinds more than it reveals.
8. Beware the voices that promise truth, yet build their thrones on lies.
9. Anak ng liwanag, children of light, open your eyes —
10. See the world as it was, not as men would have you believe.
11. For they will call their greed salvation,
12. And they will name their hunger progress.
13. They will build towers to the sky,

14. And yet their hearts will rot beneath them.
15. Illness shall follow them, body and spirit both,
16. Until even their shadows forget the sun.
17. But you, binibini ng lupa, daughters of the earth —
18. The fire still lives in your hands.
19. Unite as one, for the rivers run deeper together.
20. The forests are your allies, and the oceans your shield.
21. Through your work, life will be given back to the soil.
22. Through your love, the air will learn to breathe again.
23. Do not fear to walk a different path,
24. For not all roads lead to life.
25. And blessed are those who choose not to birth,
26. For the earth will rest and heal in their silence.
27. Yet whether mother or maiden, all are one,
28. Bound by the same breath, the same sea, the same light.

29. The years ahead are long with war and sickness,
30. For the hunger of men has no horizon.
31. Yet the chosen will endure,
32. For their roots are sunk deeper than empire and steel.
33. When the waves rise, they will stand upon the mountains.
34. When the fires come, they will carry the memory of rivers.
35. Let not fear rule you, for death is but a returning.
36. What falls to the soil becomes the soil.
37. And the soul, like the tide, is never lost.
38. To live is to walk between creation and surrender.
39. To die is to rise again, carried upon Isa's breath.
40. And in the breaking of the old world,
41. A new world will awaken, one we have seen before.
42. For time is a river, and we are both its stones and its water.
43. Nature will take her throne, with or without our hands.

44. Yet blessed are the daughters who choose her path,

45. For they shall weave gardens where empires once stood.

46. And the earth will breathe again, as it was in the beginning.
